WE DEDICATE

PRESIDENT EMERITUS WILLIAM G. FROST

The Senior Class of 1937 has the honor to dedicate its volume of THE CHIMES to President Emeritus and Mrs. William Goodell Frost.

The story of the founding of Berea is one of bravery and sacrifice, of faith and purpose. Strong men and women with hope and trust in their hearts erected a log building on the ridge and struggled to establish the small school that was the first Berea. The development of this pioneer organization into a large school unit with a smoothly running and unusually complicated set-up called for wisdom, courage, and foresight as great as that of John A. R. Rogers, John Gregg Fee, and Henry Fairchild.

From 1892 until 1920 President and Mrs. Frost served Berea directly. They left a scholarly, peaceful life in Oberlin to work with a tiny school weakened by the death of President Fairchild, and to raise from that beginning a greater, a new Berea. To their administration we owe much that makes Berea distinctive. At the time of crisis in 1904, when the Kentucky legislature enacted a law against the education of the white and black races in one school, President Frost remembered the hill country and its people. He discovered Appalachian America. Under his hand the labor system evolved from a scheme of finding a few jobs for some of the most needy students to a complex system of student industries. Through the work and guidance of President and Mrs. Frost the campus grew amazingly. They looked ahead and dreamed and planned.

To these two, President and Mrs. Frost, and to their ideal of a wiser, better hill land where labor and learning walk together, we dedicate this book.

DORIS ULMANN

OUR THEME

It is not difficult to find a theme for THE CHIMES dedicated to President and Mrs. Frost, for their contributions to Berea are so many that almost every aspect of the college is a tribute to them. Great material gains were made during the administration of President Frost—attendance jumped from 354 in 1892 to 2,675 in 1920, and the money value of Berea College increased from $200,000 in 1892 to $4,000,000 in 1920. Great as these material advances were, even more important to Berea was President Frost's recognition of the needs and possibilities of the mountain people of Appalachia, and his attempt to realize these possibilities by meeting these needs. Not the least hindrance to his objective was the extreme poverty of the people in the area Berea served, and so in an effort to make education possible for all, President Frost developed the labor system.

Mrs. Frost was President Frost's active companion and helper in his effort to realize his aims. But aside from the part she played in carrying out her husband's plans, Mrs. Frost is important to Berea. She was one of the first art teachers in Berea, and whenever her name is mentioned, art and beauty are mentioned. She tried continually to incorporate the beautiful with the practical, and Berea's continued emphasis on beauty is due in no small part to Mrs. Frost.

Having decided to find a beautiful aspect of the labor system for the theme of our annual, we happened upon some lovely photographs of Berea hands at work, made by Mrs. Doris Ulmann. We knew immediately that these pictures were what we were looking for and through the courtesy of the administration we are allowed to to present seven of them on our division pages. Well known for some years as a photographer of merit, Mrs. Ulmann is particularly noted for her character studies of Southern mountain people, a number of which appeared in Roll, Jordan, Roll, a book on Southern life created by Mrs. Ulmann, in collaboration with Mrs. Julia Peterkin. A close friend of Berea College and a frequent visitor to our campus, Mrs. Ulmann upon her death in 1934 left to Berea thousands of her photographs, over 3,000 of which are already in our Art Building, and also gave $10,000 for the housing and care of these pictures.

In actually working out the book itself, our first problem was the cover. No modernistic, air-brushed, embossed cover seemed consistent either with the Frosts or with Berea. In fact, the more we thought the more we realized that we had to have Berea homespun covers, and after several exciting weeks of figuring and corresponding, we started Mr. David Gilliam, a Mountain Weaver Boy, weaving THE CHIMES cloth. He finished the necessary 198 yards in about 198 hours of hard work. Many of us would have balked at the prospect of doing so much of one thing, but David tackled the job joyfully, telling us again and again that he "felt honored" in being permitted to weave this cloth. With such a fine spirit woven into each and every cover, we may be sure that when we pick up the 1937 CHIMES, we literally pick up a little piece of Berea.

Our dedication, our theme, and our cover all combined to limit our design for THE CHIMES. No elaborate, flowery curlicues would do. Our book had to be simple and strong. Some, no doubt, will be disappointed in this year's CHIMES because it lacks a certain showman-ship and dash, but let them remember that here we are trying to catch a spirit—the spirit of Berea—which simply is not to be found in the professional pens that turn out "dandy" college annuals, but which must be found in us Bereans. For this reason, guided by what we think are the outstanding characteristics of this spirit—simplicity and strength, we have done all the art work ourselves, trying in it to express what Berea means to us.

THE CAT-LOVER

-FRANK LONG

Frank Long again generously contributes to THE CHIMES one of his lovely woodcuts. Mr. Long, who is at present working on murals for the Hagerstown, Maryland, post office, exhibited some of his interesting work in our Art Building this year. No artist could better catch the spirit which we are trying to express in this annual.

SENIORS--1937

SENIORITY

"You are old, Lordly Seniors," the freshmen declare. "And your dignity weighs on your mind And yet all of our business becomes your affair. You're a bit of a bother, we find."

"Just one year in this college," the sophomores maintain, "Has been all that we need to perceive How good management done by a class with a brain Will brighten things up when you leave."

"There's no reason, dear friends," says the juniors en masse, "For your hanging around any more.
The diplomas are yours—we've the campus at last!
Be gone, or we'll show you the door."

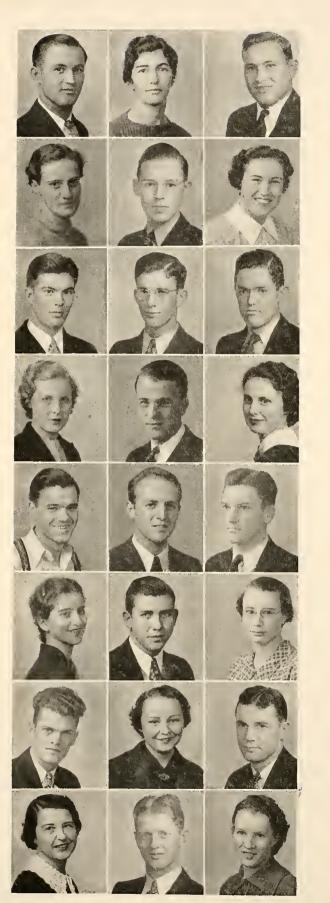

And the seniors meanwhile see the world in a haze As a beautiful pinkish-blue glow. They beamishly smile on each class from a daze. (Just ignore them—they soon have to go).

INTERCOLLEGIATE SPORTS

BASKETBALL

In the Alumni-Varsity game, which opened the 1936-1937 basketball season, the grads did the expected and handily beat down the varsity defense to win 32-26 in a game watched by three thousand people. Captain Blair again injured his bad knee first hurt in the 1934 Homecoming game and was lost to the Mountaineers for the rest of the season. Defeats at the hands of powerful University of Kentucky and little Cumberland ended the pre-vacational schedule.

The first K. I. A. C. game brought the Western Hilltoppers a stiffly-contested 40-25 victory over the blue and white cagers. The second game of the season was with the previously undefeated Eastern Maroons. The Mountaineers struck early to run up a 11-1 lead, and then coasted to a 33-26 victory.

A series of seven games in sixteen days started off with a 37-32 loss to the Wesleyan Panthers. The blue and white five then triumphed over the hapless Transylvania Pioneers 63-41. William Wright won himself a place in Berea tradition along with his famous brothers by scoring a record-breaking total of thirty-five points. In the return game with Eastern the Bereans led during the first half, but an exchange of desperate rallies in the second half left the game tied. Eastern took sweet revenge in the overtime period to win 44-37. Another defeat followed, this time to the Centre Colonels 60-50. Then the Morehead Eagles clawed the Mountaineers 53-37 in the worst defeat suffered by the Berea team during the season. After the cancellation of a scheduled game with Louisville, the Mountaineers lost a second time to Western, 50-39.

The regular season ended as Georgetown and Berea matched points until the blue and white cagers took a three-point lead and held it to win 41-38. This game left the Mountaineers just above Louisville and Transylvania in conference standings, with three victories and six defeats in K. I. A. C. competition.

At the 1937 K. I. A. C. Tournament held at Eastern the Bereans won two high-scoring thrillers to advance in the semi-finals. The Mountaineers gained revenge over the Centre Colonels in their first game in the tournament, 60-48. A second game matched Berea with Union, conquerors of the league-leading Morehead five. The Mountaineers recovered the lead just in time to annex a 40-39 victory. In the semi-final game with Murray the Thorobreds barely saved themselves from the greatest upset in the history of the K. I. A. C. by staving off a great Berea rally in the closing minutes. The game score was 24-23.

Western outplayed the tired Thorobreds in the finals to take the conference championship for the sixth consecutive year. Besides taking all-state honors, Clark and Wright of Berea annexed both high-scoring records for the tournament. Clark scored fifty points in three games for high-point honors. Wright tallied twenty-three markers in the Centre game for top individual honors in any single game.

The loss of Wright, Clark, and Adams by graduation will seriously cripple Berea's basketball hopes for the 1937-38 season. Men receiving letters this year were: W. Wright, Clark, Adams, Keith, Deyton, McDowell, Thomas, Brashear, and Beldon. Keith has been elected captain for the coming season, and Palmer has been chosen manager.

The Quimby-coached freshmen five recorded four defeats to one victory in inter-collegiate competition. They lost twice to the Eastern yearlings, and to Wesleyan and Transylvania freshmen squads. In the final game Ratliff scored twenty-nine points to lead his teammates to a 44-26 victory over the Centre Lieutenants. Numerals went to Ratliff, McAfee, B. Clark, Powell, Durham, Mullins, R. Reynolds, W. Reynolds, Bryant, and Wilson.

CROSS COUNTRY

The fall three-mile cross country event saw another successful season. Meets were exchanged with Eastern and the University of Kentucky. The Kentucky runners twice nosed out the Berea greyhounds by one point, winning both meets 28-27. Eastern fared badly at the hands of the blue and white runners, losing two meets by large scores in both the freshmen and varsity competitions. Clark, Pilson, Moxley, and Banner won letters. Felton, Blake, and Moore earned their numerals.

TRACK

The loss of Stewart, Wheeler, Nesbitt, Waller, and McDaniel from last year's track squad would have been damaging to Berea's hopes to regain the state championship lost to Centre last year if it were not for the new men coming up to take their places. A crop of promising sophomores from the cross country team and the freshman track squad of last year, together with several veterans from the 1936 runners have combined to give Berea a highly successful season. Though weak as usual in the dashes, the squad had plenty of strength in the distances with Ward, Henderson, Pilson, and M. Clark, to be depended upon to turn in fast times. Gunkler had Roberts, Powell, Goforth, Canida, Candy, and Deyton for the field events.

As expected, Berea lost its first meet of the year—one with the University of Kentucky, but later decisively licked Centre, last year's state champions, in a dual meet. When Berea easily defeated Morehead, Eastern, and Western at Berea, making more points than the other three combined, it seemed inevitable that Berea would regain the state championship.

On May 15, Berea won the K.I.A.C. track, and field meet, defeating Centre, the defending titlist, 70 to 57½. Led by Captain Arvil Ward and Leonard Roberts, each of whom won two first places, Berea scored heavily in distance runs to offset Centre's advantage in the sprints.

Leonard Roberts, sophomore from Pikeville, Kentucky, shattered one of the conferences marks when he threw the javelin 178 feet, 6½ inches, bettering by more than ten feet, the previous record set by Hammack of Western.

The freshman squad also won the state title, scoring 94 points to Centre's 44, Louisville's 17, and Western's 9.

TENNIS

Notwithstanding the loss of state amateur champion Major Gardner and Lloyd Roberts from last year's squad the varsity team seems set for another successful series of matches this spring. Five men from last year's racquet swingers, Adams, H. Gardner, Williams, Blair, and Keith, are assured of placing among the six ranking players. Meets scheduled for the squad include two each with Eastern, Centre, and the University of Kentucky. Western and the University of Cincinnati will also meet the Berea team.

SWIMMING

Inter-collegiate swimming has been given official sanction this spring and men from all three schools are participating in the meets, although intra-mural competitions are being continued as before. The first swim of the season, with the Eastern Maroons in the Seabury pool, resulted in a 38-37 victory for the visitors. A return meet with Eastern and one with Morehead are on the schedule.

INTRAMURAL SPORTS

SPEEDBALL.

The College again displayed its prowess over the Academy in the annual Turkey Day speed-ball game, winning 17-0. The victory earned numerals for Bailey, Boyce, H. Canida, J. Canida, Grimwood, J. Hamilton, Behrens, A. Hale, Hurst, Gibbs, Gaston, Morris, and Hibbitts.

BASEBALL.

Although the baseball season is just under way the varsity nine is certain of easy sailing against what competition a scrappy but somewhat inexperienced freshman squad and the teams from the Academy and Junior High School can offer.

HANDBALL

In a spirited tournament this spring the college handball players took all the top honors. In the finals of the regular tournament Neff downed Boyd to take the coveted gold medal. Boyd then earned the silver medal by beating Mullins in the consolation round.

DORMITORY BASKETBALL

This year 16 teams fought through a wide-open dormitory basketball season which left both the north and south teams from the third floor of Howard Hall undefeated. In the following tournament the northerners defeated their floor mates and progressed into the finals nearly to shut out a third floor Pearsons team for the championship. In an honor team picked by Pinnacle writers Parks, Collins, and Williams of the winning team, and Massey, Mills, Taulbee, and Hale won all-tournament recognition.

THE DRAMATIC CLUB

The Dramatic Club has had a busy and a successful year. A revised plan for gaining admission to the club in which the interested applicant actually works in or with a one-act play has proved successful both in locating talent and in teaching the fundamentals of play production.

This year the Club presented three, instead of the usual two, major plays. The fall play, the admirably acted "The Cardinal," was made more outstanding through unusually effective staging and costuming. The second presentation was the splendid performance of "The Servant in the House" by a combination Faculty-Dramatic Club cast. The spring offering was the sparkling, gay "Through the Keyhole."

The work of the Dramatic Club has not been confined to campus activities. Members of the Club have gone twice to Cincinnati and once to Nashville to present one-act plays written by Dr. Raine.

Believing that creative writing plays an important part in our college life, we have started this year what we hope will become an increasingly important feature of Berea's future annuals—a creative writing section. Though this section is necessarily small and makes no pretense to include the best writing done in Berea this year, it does represent a small section of Berea's written thought.

BEREA

NIGHT SOUNDS

The city never sleeps, but my little town is so quiet by midnight that no human footfall breaks the stillness. Last night the silence almost frightened me. Then I found that I had been entirely mistaken. The town was not still at all. To be sure, the usual day noises were missing, but the night was as full of rushing sounds as ever the day had been.

I knew that I was out of place among so many lovers whispering their sweet secrets to one another. They were courting all around me, so close that I could almost touch them with my hand. Ten thousand eager questions were whispered by the impetuous winds, ten thousand breathless answers murmured in reply, as gay gusts sported in the white moonlight. They skipped and danced in the moonlight, and they whispered to each other in the white moonlight. One wanton little gust kissed his sweetheart. Then all the others clapped their hands and whispered again. Suddenly they ran scampering down the silver road until there was only an echo of their light footfalls and their whisperings.

Soon I discovered why they had skipped away. He came running around the corner whistling down the wind. He waited. No answer. He whistled again, this time with anxious eagerness. Silence again. He had planned for a rendezvous under the sycamore. What a night for a rendezvous, with the moonlight streaming through the bare boughs and fretting the white path with dancing shadows! Again he whistled, this time almost fiercely, as he ran to the corner for another look. Silence, and still silence. Then far away from the South I heard a faint answer with a mocking twirl to the end of it. Was it an echo? Another whistling call, a nearer answer that was jaunty and gay, as she came frolicking through the oaks in the moonlight. These mad April calls!

While the troops of lovers had been whispering, while the anxious one was whistling down the wind, I heard a sighing in the distance. It rose and fell, never any nearer, never any farther away, a throng of sad sighs blending into one gentle moan, the night sighing, as I was sighing, that there could be such beauty, the mystery of it almost too much to bear. To think that the scarred old world could have a misty loveliness like this, quivering vines clapping their dark hands in the moonlight, tall oak-silhouettes swaying to meet their silver-meshed shadows, nothing still, everything swinging, weaving to and fro, lilting and swaying in the moonlight.

But the sighing was not all. For a moment the stars were singing together. At the sweet sound all the lovers came trooping back, and they whispered all over again in the shadows and danced to the hushed rhythm of the stars until they woke a robin in the honeysuckle vine. Then all ran skipping down the silver ribbon and were gone.

-Elisabeth Peck

(Editor's Note: Mrs. Elisabeth Peck, popular teacher of social studies in the Academy for twenty-five years, has written a two hundred page book of poetry, American Frontier, which is to be released May 28 by the Doubleday, Doran Company. This book, which contains thirty illustrations by Richard Bennett, is a series of narratives expressing the reaction of frontier life upon the people of the frontier. In scope, it includes the area from the Appalachian valleys to the Pacific, and covers the period from 1780 to 1875. Each poem is dated and placed geographically, and the material which was gathered from old letters, diaries, newspapers, family tales, oral accounts, county court records, etc. is historically accurate.

Since American Frontier is easily the literary event of the year for Berea and represents a real contribution to American literature, we have persuaded Mrs. Peck to honor our new section with a short sketch.)

METAMORPHOSIS

Four years. Four long, languid, listless years have gone by since I came to college. No, they were short, staccato years, passing like glistening rapier-passes across my consciousness. Melancholy, hectic, all-embracing they were as they peeled off one by one. But they were all alike, a natural metamorphosis, a peeling off the skin of one year to expose the new but similar skin of another year. Only a slight, frail, pushing growth of my consciousness sensitized the change.

The drab winters have four times come to the campus in draped leadenness of grey skies, grey wind-moans and gaunt tall trees with their shaking branches. Yes, and for four Springs the tree-limbs have held bud-nodules, and the sunlight warmed the chill air. Four somnolent summers sapped the strength from green grass until it turned brown; and the blaze of four falls daubed the campus trees with lemon-yellow leaves against pencil-black tree trunks while the rains dinned and pelted large puddles in the ground as the hollow wind rushed through leaf-emptying trees.

Four years, one like the other and the other like the others. No distinction in my memory—just a smudge of time that left its blurred tint. I can not say that there was a day and I will remember the day, but all the days were alike, leaving their sensuous memory.

Memories are but impressions. Specter-like winter mornings at six o'clock, I raced like a disembodied spirit to drab breakfasts, the shadowed corners of Ladies' Hall parlor. Rainy mornings, heavy sleepiness, ghostly emptiness of dust-draped halls, the rush to classes and the commanding insistence of black cinder paths. Or mornings, ecstatically clear and cool when spring was youth and I was youth and to live was to breathe in cool, tingling air that laundered the inmost corners of lungs and brain. The crisp, morning-like vigor of science and English classes and the dull monotony of history and education. To the library. The seven-o'clock indirect lighting of the morning, a carrell in the stacks, my desk light like a vesper glow in the soft darkness of rows and shelves of books. Here all the world lies dead, waiting to be resurrected by the trumpet of my interested mind. Time! Time! For only time to spend my life forever unresponsive to bells, to linger in these bookladen recesses, to read only one slowly and relishingly as desired. But, no! The beat of the feet overhead, and the muffled sound of feet outside going to classes insist that I must hurry, must learn all I can. I will miss some idea, some experience if I don't get in the crowd. Do! Do! Absorb all! All things at once. I must hold on to the coat-tails of time even if I cannot keep up with it. No lagging! No resting! Pleasures of books left to join my oxford-clad feet in the march of the crowd outside.

Chapel windows on clear spring mornings, painted blue by the sky outside, the slow revolving of heads if the speaker is uninteresting, stealthy reading of books. I have become a connoisseur of colors and textures of hair from examining the heads of students in front of me. Hair like new, yellow butter, red hair tinged with gold, deep, definite black hair. Chapel on rainy mornings filled with sounds of crisp, rattling umbrellas, and raincoats being laid aside. Coldness. President's jerky speeches and his abrupt nod of dismissal. Crowds of students bulging from the chapel doors to lunch, a continuous, moving line down the cement walks, all with one, unanimous purpose to go to lunch. Ladies Hall. Perhaps chapel was out early so I dance with another girl to some silly, slobbering tune and see girls with pale lips and shiny noses. Some are graceful, and some are awkward as they juggle through a dance. I have looked from the parlor window, heard the chimes start playing for lunch and the line of boys across the street start in a body surging toward Ladies Hall. Lunch. The current of thought of a congenial table as though all ten were connected on one circuit. Afternoons and classes, or perhaps I cut classes and loafed around the room eating bakery left-overs, drinking hot tea and gossiping with friends. Or perhaps to the library again. A snatched glimpse at a magazine—haven't time to read this interesting-looking article if I look through this other magazine. The click of student's heels coming and going in the circulation room. Faces, faces on similar bodies. Five o'clock and the librarians come from behind closed doors and up groaning stairways from the bowels of the library. The tall, flat, two dimensional woman with black hair, the short, grey-haired one with the heavy lower lip, the small brown-haired one with tortoise-shell glasses and inadequately thin legs, and the one who bounces as she walks from shelves to desk. Perhaps they stepped from one of Dickens' or Thackeray's books, my imagination tells me. From the library to the street again. Outside even the noise of a student speaking to me is loud, and I want to whisper, "Hello," to them so accustomed have I become to the muffled noises of the library.

Perhaps it is raining in winter, and there are momentary pocked scars that raindrops make as they hit small ponds of water, and the lights on the streets. Only four. Boone Tavern, the most prominent. It's neon-redness blurred by the mist of rain. Perhaps it is a spring evening when the campus buildings are black refuges against an iridescent sky. Rose and yellow sunsets melted in creamy smoothness in the west. Evenings, calm like sleep. Graceful curve of white walks.

Dormitories. Feeds, relaxed wit and exuberant happiness. Girls with smiles and friendship. Girls with an armour of quiet solemnness.

Dormitory life—girls have gone through the halls in continual lines. Seniors were graduated, and I missed their familiar faces but soon they vanished. Friends, pretty girls with blonde curls, and brown curls—white fingers arranging black hair like uncontrolled angels tempted by sin. A tall blonde with the prim, neat walk who was always cheerful and never thought too seriously, but slept on all her problems. A girl with the freshness of a daisy. The blur of four years has dimmed her acute ideals to lackadaisicalness. One whose sense of inferiority caused her to clothe her attitudes in scornful criticism of others. My friend, never so happy as when attention and friendly honors were hers, but she knew that to listen to other people was to gain their appreciation. She listened charmingly, and we all loved her. The freshman who could and did make everyone laugh without discretion as to the means of sarcasm or jokes used.

Boys, friendly, witty boys, to joke with, the key-man and his simple philosophy, the men who work at the Heat & Power plant seeing them by huge turbines and dynamos—Power—good sports. "Grandma" at the "Coop," and her continuous harmless chatter. Teachers I have loved and admired, domineering deans and untrusting teachers-in-charge. All these are a part of these four years.

Nights, queer, unrelaxed, gaunt nights of study. 12:00, 1:00, 2:00, laying my book aside, all asleep, dark, impersonal halls, my window and black plush-darkness—no lights on this side of the campus. I am alone in space, in an empty world.

Enjoying a hamburger at the "Coop" with a friend, or Beethoven's music in the Capehart room, or Frank Long's paintings in the Art Building go along with escapes out of town, a glad return, and Boone Tavern dinners.

Four years. All is a series of impressions with no connecting unity. I have absorbed some culture and refinement of taste—only a natural growth. I would rather be as I am now than as I was before this blur of four years came. College was a metamorphosis, gradual and quiet with no violent upheavals of decisions, but only a slow growth, resulting quietness of spirit and simplicity of desires. But what was the use of it all? I would have grown in a rocky soil also.

In the spring when nodules of buds again roughen the tree limbs, I will pass down the chapel aisle gowned in black. My parents will be there and perhaps they will say, "She has worked hard for this education. Perhaps it will tame her wild imagination." I will smile and remember only four years of absorbed impressions. "I'm not educated," I will insistingly tell them. "Pooh, pooh," they will answer. "You always were a strange child. Of course you are educated when you receive a degree."

WHY?

Since I got mother's last letter telling of Carl Barnett's accident I have been wondering rather wildly just why life is so tangled. I've known Carl all my life, we went through the grades and into high school together. Although he was one of the most ambitious boys I have ever seen—ambitious in that he wanted to be good, straight, and honestly successful—he had to drop out of school at the end of his freshman year. His father is a lazy, careless person whose doubtful honor and whose faith in get-rich-quick schemes lost for him every job and all the money he ever had. For some time the family was dependent upon the small salary earned by Carl's step mother; then Carl started looking for work. Times were bad and he couldn't find anything. He joined the navy, enlisting in the aviation corps. There, intelligent and eager to learn, he advanced rapidly. While in school he had written exciting themes and stories; now he began to write brief, striking poems and short articles, two or three of which were published in one of the better-class weekly magazines. I heard from him once in a long while—he was getting along splendidly, had a girl who according to him was almost perfect, and was happier than he had ever been before.

The accident was a week ago last Wednesday. He was in an airplane crash, and they thought for three days he couldn't possibly live. However, mother wrote, last Tuesday his fat, indolent father received an official telegram saying that Carl would live, but that he had been placed in a hospital for the incurably insane.

EDUCATION

I was flower girl at a funeral when I was about six years old and I puzzled over it for weeks. I wondered why God had let the little baby die and whether He would really take her to heaven as they told me He would. I wondered if her mother would always cry, or if she would forget all about it, the way I did when I broke a doll. If the baby were going to live with God, why did they put her under the ground? It was all very puzzling for a six year old.

When I was eight, I heard adults mention the "day of judgment" and I spent many hours trying to satisfy my own mind about this dreaded day that came so impartially to every individual.

When I was thirteen my brother went away to college and I cried nearly all night because I knew that when I became old enough they would want me to go, and I could not bear the thoughts of going far away from home.

When I was fifteen, I had many confidential talks with my mother about marriage. I begged her to assure me that it would be no disgrace to me if I never married.

But now I am an adult and such things no longer trouble me— not that I understand them any better, but there are so many things to think about. I wonder if I should wear this rust finger nail polish with my green dress?

ANTICIPATION

It is time for the mail to be delivered and I'am in the room alone, studying. I do not really expect a letter—in fact there is no one from whom I should hear today, but I cannot keep from thinking that the mail should be here in a few minutes.

I hear someone coming up the stairs and think perhaps it is the monitor bringing the mail now, but no one comes down the hall and I look at my book again, telling myself that I will not mind if I do not get a letter.

Someone else is on the stairs and I look out the door to see if it is the monitor. It is, and I jump quickly back into the room so that she will not think I am waiting for her, and feel sorry for me because she is not bringing anything for me.

I hear her sliding letters under other doors, gradually coming nearer to my room. My heart begins to beat faster and my eyes will not move on to the next sentence in my book.

She is outside my door now—a letter comes through the crack—and from where I sit the name on it looks like mine. Walking "calmly" to it, I find that it is for me. In the left hand corner are the words, Berea College Library my book is due.

THE EXISTENCE OF THE JUNIOR IN RELATION TO ITS HABITAT

A dormitory is a student storage plant. It has layers of compartments, runways, exits, entrances, and assemblage rooms. You take night time storage for $5.40 per nine weeks. The place closes at 9:30 p.m. and opens at 6:00 a.m.

On entering the junior-senior building, students follow an instinctive path. They march up the walk, wheel at the holly bushes, and file through the clusters of couples paralleling the door. Each one delays the line by pausing to scan the announcements on the bulletin board. Each one fingers the second class mail on the table in the small parlor. One by one they peep into the reception room. Some stray inside to flip over the pages of the newspaper and single out the cartoon section. Others wander over to the radio and twist out a kaleidoscopic review of the moment's programs. Some gather around the piano or hug a corner, and date for an hour. Finally, by 7:35 they sift out and wind up the stairs to their inevitable rooms.

But rooms, though inevitable, are also indispensable. They are essential to the maintenance of an identity. On the campus it is the tendency to view students as an aggregation, but in their rooms they are individuals. Dormitory lodgings provide a temporary isolation. They are recharging stations where one can assimilate or ignore the influences of one day and generate enough self possession to pursue a determined course the next.

There are certain common features of girls' dormitory rooms besides structure and furniture—the boy friend's picture, an old model typewriter, and oranges in the window from successive morning meals. Wet underwear on the foot rail of the bed or on a hanger in the window, hair water on the dresser, an alarm clock, and two waste baskets filled to capacity with the wrappings of the last box from home. The pictures gummed to the walls exhibit the inhabitant's taste for magazine artists. There are pantry accommodations in every room—orange crates preferred. The coffee pot, the jar of sugar, salt, tea balls, sack of coffee, peanut butter, strav silver and china are disarranged within.

A dormitory may be defined, in part, by describing the surfaces peculiar to it. Who does not know the water-logged, soap-worn surface of the window-ledge above wash basins, the cracked and spotted cement floors, ironing boards, warped and thinly padded, dresser tops greyed with many layers of powder rubbed into the grain, copious new sheets stiff as canvas, and old sheets processed to tenderness by the laundry, and seersucker blankets of striped wool and cotton—one row shrunk and the other rippled.

There are characteristic smells—the toasted, meaty fumes of buttered popcorn, and stale, over-heated rooms, the dust and tarnished smell of water spilled on a radiator, the untouchable odor of disinfectant in the showers (an essence between coal oil and cheap perfume), the sweaty breath of scorched cloth redampened and resteamed under an iron, and the boiled milk atmosphere of clean clothes drying.

Life in the dormitory is made up of "New Regimes." A "New Regime" constitutes a rearrangement of the furniture, a revised plan for cleaning the room, a family wash, a revival of former high standards for personal appearance, or a solemn resolution never again to leave edible scraps in the waste basket for the delectation of the mice. "New Regimes" may date from the exchange of diplomatic notes after the first quarrel between roommates. They are inaugurated periodically after those nights spent in outlining the last seven chapters before a test.

The inhabitants of a dormitory are easily classified. You have the steady daters, the spasmodic daters, and the indifferent. There are the studious and the sleepers, the partakers of breakfast and the girls who have no first period class, the gregarious and the remote, Home Ec. majors and non-Home Ec. majors, coffee drinkers and soup imbibers, those who patronize the mail order houses and those who receive packages infrequently. The possibilities for classification are endless.

WINTER SNOW ON FALL LEAVES

There is nothing quite like the first snow of the year. This year it came in the fall before the brown, red, and gold leaves had fallen from the trees. It had been raining and the grass and earth were soaked; puddles stood in the low level spots of the campus. The trees drooped wearily in their brave fall colors. Students hurried about with heads bent to protect their faces from the chill of the rain. The whole campus was dreary—too dreary for a fall day.

I was walking across a wet shiny street when the rain began to falter a bit in the rising wind. Then suddenly the rain was no longer rain, but snow. The first drop-like flakes seemed to fall all at once, driven by the wind. The flakes—they were hardly flakes—grew larger and larger as I walked along the street. Soon they had reached an almost impossible size. Some of them seemed nearly an inch through as they plunged downward from above the trees. At first they dissolved into the wet ground and the numerous puddles, but soon the tops of the higher grass clumps began to whiten. I looked up. The leaves of the trees too were greyed with the caked snow. And still the flakes became larger and larger, and the earth became whiter and whiter.

The whiteness came almost too quickly for realization. One moment the trees were there with their gay, magic fall colors, and the next the white-gray of the caked snow was there too, contrasting vividly with the red, gold, and brown. The yellow leaves blended with the snow. The red and brown, however, contrasted so vividly that both the white and the colors stood out sharply in the watcher's eye. The little prickly bushes along side the walk were also putting on their winter woolens. Their rosy-cheeked berries and red-brown-green leaves, half-hidden by the snow, vied in brilliance with their virgin-white coverings. The green grass around had bent reverently to the damp earth and allowed the snow to sift over and around it until it was hidden from the wind and the sky. Only the deeper puddles resisted the onslaught of the white plague, but even their surfaces became scummed with gray slush and stood as if jelled. Fall had become winter.

I walked along with the wetness of the sidewalks soaking secretly through the leather of my shoes. My feet chilled with the dampness of the snow water. The flakes of snow covered my bare head and melted down through my hair. Tiny rivulets streamed down my neck to the collar of my coat. The flakes beat at my face. The front of my coat whitened. I inhaled a deep breath of the chill, snow-drawn air. My heart beat faster; my body straightened. My face lifted to the sky, and I felt the excitement of the season's first snow.

-Carl E. Auvil

MOUNTAIN HERITAGE

A weathered shack made of lumber slabs set close to the old sawmill made a home for me a mountain boy this lumber-camp of the mountains by the stream of chilled mountain dews.

The rains that swelled the splash-dam broke on a night of mountain stormsshattered remains marked the destruction where the shack was swept through the gorge.

Here on the plains the mountains keep calling though they beat me drove me away I must return to the mountains My body is dust of the mountains My soul's of God's infinite hills.

-Virgil Powell

TREE

Two lines of thinness hold against the sky Straight the massive trunk before the naked eye, While dark waving shadows deep along the bark Lift to a lightness and greyness of mark. Aloft, midst the limbs and boughs bearing shade, Leaves form an infinite green cavalcade Of lines mixed with blueness and brightness of light Mingled with hauteur and beauty of height.

IUSTICE—COLORED

II.

There his body hung With the white life wrung From the black frame flung Man's ignominy Against the sky.

There upon a tree Strung for all to see At hands of man.

DEAD!

"Dead! God, how much there is in that little word!"

I agree with Byron. But just what does it mean? Dead—has one passed into the "gentle end of human sorrows," into the "blind cave of eternal night," into "another life," into "the last limit of all things?"

Just that one little word! I now am doing what many many people before me have been doing in trying to decide for myself the meaning of it.

My first idea came very early in life. When I was two, a baby brother died whose corpse I was allowed to look at, for, mother said, he was soon going away never to come back. I thought he was asleep in a new kind of baby buggy, and then begged to have the little white tassels on his shoes to keep.

Since then until lately I've taken for granted what my parents, Sunday-school teachers and pastors have told me about death and immortality. But I've added to these rather passive beliefs a personal feeling of strange fascination whenever an acquaintance has died. Sometimes it leaves me after two or three days, but rarely.

In the last few months I've decided to do something about this rather unnatural reaction, and to form my own ideas about immortality. Realizing I lack the wide range of knowledge and experience I would necessarily need, I have turned to poetry to discover the feelings those of deep thought have put down, hoping that I would meet my own conclusions in those expressed by someone else.

I have remembered with Wordsworth that once I thought I would never die. I have tried to remember with him the pure delight I used to experience in nature with the idea in mind that it was a continuation of delight I had experienced before birth and that I will again experience after death. But to me immortal life could never include physical pleasure.

With Frost I have compared death's descending to an early snow's descending in a dark forest. Steadily it would cover me until I, having lived an ordinary life "with nothing done to evil, no important triumph won," would remain forever where I lay, unmissed by the world.

In contrast, I have mused with A. E. Housman on whether or not it is best to do just one thing of note and then leave this world for another where fame never dies.

In neither of these quite opposite thoughts have I found an outlet for my feelings. Death means too little in the former; it means too much in the latter.

I have looked at Sidney Lanier's stirrup-cup of death, made rich with David, Keats, Gotama, Omar Khayyam, Chaucer, and Shakespeare, but I haven't wanted to taste of it and thus go to make somebody else's cup richer or poorer.

With Browning I am able to fight a battle of life until the black moment, through the dwindling of the fiend-voices. Yet I cannot go far enough to say I shall clasp anyone again.

I have sung almost sincerely Whitman's carol exulting death. But it is this joyous singing about death I am trying to get away from, whether it be expressed, as here, or unexpressed, as in my own feeling.

I have wondered, along with Wilfred Scawen Blunt, why the only living creature that knows it must die is the only living creature that can laugh. And I have wondered with Shelley if these other living creatures can be so blissfully unconcerned because they already know the truth, the truth which we will find only when we reach the bottom of the well.

I have carefully tried to discover some word in Milton, Shakespeare, or Keats—in one whose thoughts I know are worthy to be considered carefully—which would instantly meet a sympathetic response, but it has been in vain. In a tiny poem written by a comparatively modern poet I have found these lines which I cannot force myself to ignore, and which I accept as my attitude to death:

"So, with face lit with delight
And all gratitude, I stay
Yet to press their hands and say,
"Thanks. —So fine a time! Good night!""

And I add to this that sometime—sometime—"Death, thou shalt die" and everyone you've claimed will be one with a being who is mightier than anyone ever dreamt of.

-Elsie Cairns

THE MACHINE AGE COMES TO LOST CREEK

Trying to make me visualize his life before we met, while we lay idly in the deep grass he told me stories from out of his past.

"Yes, ma'am," he responded, "I remember very well the first automobile I ever saw. It must have been fifteen years ago, for I was just a young ho'se startin' a beard and l'arnin' to love women and like liquor.

"One Saturday night Elisha Conaway and me went over on Rowdy a-courting old Bill Simp-kinses two gals, Adabelle and Ellen. They were the two prertiest things you ever looked at; blue-eyed and yaller-headed, plump as pa'tridges in a good mast fall, with roundin' hips like a two year old mare mule; I jist nat'rally couldn't tell which un uz the prettier and was half jealous of Elisha fer courtin the little'n.

"We had us a time. Old Sarie Simpkins, their ma, loved a dram o' liquor as good as any man I know, even though old Bill never teched a drap. So all night along, Elisha and me'd take turns gittin' on our ho'ses and ridin' down Rowdy about a mile to old Bull-Snake Campbell's to fetch back a half a gallon of liquor. Bull-Snake didn't sell none but the best, 'ported in frum back in Knott county.

"Well, we kep' a drinkin' and a-courtin' till purt nigh one o'clock, when I happened to ricollect I uz a goin' to take my best gal to a big Memorial meetin' at the Holliday Graveyard the next day. I c'mmence to beg Elisha to le's go home. He didn't want to go, but I woultn't quit tell he agreed. I actually had a fool notion in my head o' marryin' that redheaded gal o' mine, so hit woultn't do fo' me to break a promise to her.

"Along about two o'clock we finally got started out up Rowdy. It was so dark you coultn't see a stime. We cut across frum Jesse Engle's Branch onto McJilton, struck into the head of Cabbage Patch, and finally come out onto the main Lost Creek road. Both of us were so drunk we could hardly sit on our ho'ses, hollerin' and shootin' like boys will, out, you know.

"We rode down Lost Creek a way a-talkin' about everything under the sun. Somehow, we got to talkin' about devils and ghostes and ha'nts. It was darker than inside of a black cat. Elisha kept edgin' his ho'se over tordg mine and I kept tryin' to light matches to see. We ware scared so, that a rabbit shinin' his eyes up at us caused Elisha to let out a whoop like a catamount and nearly lose control of old Fanny. We galloped past the school house and past the ha'nted corner of the fence where they killed the little grey pack-peddlar. In a few minutes we come to the top of the Devil's Nose there," pointing to a peculiarly sharp, long rise in the road just above his home. "I was in front on Jim, that big bay ho'se I told you about, and Elisha was right on my heels. I looked down tordg the house—out I come with the Colt's 45 I allus carried in my overcoat pocket, and jerked my ho'se so sudden he almost fell backwards. 'Lord God A'mighty,' I yelled to Elisha, 'there's some kind of a varmit down thar in front o' the house that is shore a yard between hits eyes. Git yo' gun!'

"'Don't shoot, Lorenzo! Don't shoot!' Elisha shouted, knocking my gun up so I shot into the air. 'That's one of these here ho'sless buggies or auttymobeels some feller has driv in here!'

"In a split secont longer I'd a shore a shot her lights out. I don't remember where Elisha had seen a car before, but that's what it was. One of them coal prospectors had driv it in the night before and had left the lights burnin' to protect hit. Hit uz the first un at ever uz on Lost Creek.

"No, I don't care much for um. I'll take old Jim or Dora any day. Ye don't have to buy gas fer them nor their tires don't go down on ye in the middle of a pourin' rain.

"Shore, Elisha never fo'got to torment me about it, specially when we got out on a courtin' trip. Even yit he axes me if I've ever seen any more varmits that air a yard between the eyes over on Lost Creek lately."

-Mrs. Bernice Hiser

RAIN JAZZ

(After Carl Sandburg)

All night the slanting rain drops fall.
Tin tears from a lop-sided, gold-eyed moon.
Tin tears that run down tin roofs
And fall into tin gutters.
The moon must really be only a hole in the sky
Where slag runs through from golden streets.
Otherwise one could expect more
From a gold-eyed moon.
More than tin tears that run down tin roofs
Down tin gutters
Into a dirty street.

ELISABETH S. PECK

It is fitting that on a page adjacent to student activities, particularly to the record of Academy literary societies, recognition should be given to one who has contributed greatly to those activities. Mrs. J. N. Peck is known as one of the most effective teachers upon the campus. To each of her classes she has brought profound knowledge, preparation thorough to the last detail, and devotion both professional and personal. Those who have studied under her direction have come to desire the understanding of principles as well as information.

For three decades the literary societies of the Academy have been an important part of the school program. For the major part of that time Dr. Peck has been the foremost guide, critic, and friend of the organizations. Because of her influence the work of the societies has been more than an activity; it has been a movement—a movement with a soul.

The Academy is grateful for the twenty-five years of Dr. Peck's service, and is happy in the prospect of its continuance.

LITERARY SOCIETIES

The methods by which this year's Inter-Society Contests have been carried on have been changed considerably from that of former years. The debates and Girls' Oral Reading Contests have borne the most drastic changes. Both of the aforementioned have been changed from team affairs, with society teams, into individual affairs with no team affiliations. The Impromptu Speeches, which, at this writing, have not taken place, will also be changed somewhat.

The first contest of the season was the Story-telling Contest. Calvin Bright won with a story on China, which, incidentally, happens to be his home. Betty Schumacher and Georgina McClure took second and third respectively.

The Men's Declamation Contest was the next in line. It was won by Jesse Allen of Pi Sigma. Allen, as you will recall, won first place in the Oratorical Contest last year. Ralph Cox took second, and Lacy Williams captured the third position.

Theda Patrick, a newcomer, won the Women's Declamation Contest. Marie Rigsby and Edith Gilbert tied for second place.

The next contest was the much revised Men's Debating Contest. Most of it ended in a complicated series of ties, one being a three-way tie. Nevertheless, the high honors of the night went to Henry Everman, who took the only untied first place of the evening. Chester Young was the next in line for high honors.

The Women's Essay Contest brought us our next tie. This one was for first place. The two girls who tied for this much-coveted place were Edna Brown and Stella Coleman. Wilmedia McGuire took third place.

The Men's Oratorical Contest ended up in another tie, this time being for second place. Ray Cornette and Emery Hensley were the two contestants who tied, while John Lambert carried off first place.

The Contest directly preceding this writing is the Girls' Oral Reading Contests in which both prose and poetry were read. Wilmedia McGuire won first place in the prose reading and Gertrude Manning won first place in the poetry reading. Betty Schumacher, Edith Gilbert, Betty Hackett, and Ai'een Nunn also received places.

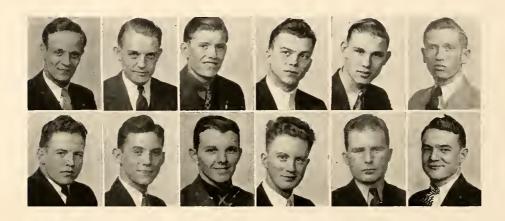

There are still two contests to come: Impromptu Speaking and After-dinner Speaking. But, at the present time Beta Alpha is ahead of the other men's societies in points, having received 13. The closest rival is Adelphic with 8 and Pi Sigma is running a close third with 7. Beta Alpha's sister society, Aelioian, is leading the girls' societies with 15. Lenorian is second with 11 points and Sororian is third with 10.

Mrs. Peck's wonderful help has been immensely appreciated by all who had anything whatsoever to do in connection with societies in the past year. The co-operation that has been received from all sources has been duly appreciated.

ATHLETICS

BASKETBALL

The 1396-37 basketball season was a rather successful one for the Academy. With only three men, Floyd Fox, Charley Hale, and William Allen, from last year's powerful quintet Coach Hughes again built a good team.

The Lions were defeated by only two teams during the season, Berea High and Hazel Green's powerful five.

The Academy for the second time during the season lost to Berea High in the finals of the 44th District Tournament. The Academy had gone to the finals without much trouble, and in the finals they fought a wonderful game against Berea High to lose by a small margin.

The Academy were given the honor of "Runners-up" and they, along with Berea High, were to represent the 44th District in the 11th Regional Tournament.

The Academy were unlucky to draw Midway for the first game in the Regional Tournament, and after a hard fight they were defeated. Midway won the state championship.

The Lions were also successful in winning the interschool championship by twice defeating each the Frosh and Junior High.

TRACK

The track team is looking better this year than it has in many years past. Though no meets have yet been held, we are hoping the team will make a good showing in the state meet.

BASEBALL

The baseball team is under way and we certainly have faith in our team this season.

GIRLS

We do not forget the girls either. The basketball team offered good games to its opponents. We hope the baseball team will do as well.

In general all sports including softball, dormitory basketball, and class basketball were more successful this year than in the previous years. We certainly enjoyed their entertainment more, and we certainly appreciate their work and effort.

Liked by everyone

- because it feels so good!

People buy Spring-Air for many reasons — it's so good looking; it has the endorsement of so many world-renowned institutions — in short, it is America's finest mattress.

But after they buy Spring-Air, then everyone praises it to the skies hecause it feels so good! That's because it's the only nationally known mattress containing the famous Karr Sleep Unit — the spring construction that carries the strongest of all guarantees. You pay no premium for Spring-Air — in fact, it's the most economical mattress you can buy.

For FURNITURE, WALLS AND WOODWORK

Bright, cheerful colors are being used more and more everywhere we go,—in the clothes we wear, our automobiles, exteriors of our modern office buildings, our kitchens, our bathrooms, hotels and theatres. Even Pullman cars and many other things and places that formerly were dull and sombre have taken on the new trend of bright colors.

KYANIZE Self-Smoothing, Lustaquik was made and perfected to meet this new era of bright colors. It was also made to keep up with the new demand for speed. Color and speed, that's it—but yet toughness and durability were not overlooked.
